Petitioner prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, entered on June 5, 1975.

Opinions Below

The opinion of the District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Appendix E, A23, is unreported. The majority and dissenting opinions of the Court of Appeals, Appendix A, A1 and A9, are reported in 517 F.2d 997 and 1002.

Jurisdiction

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on June 5, 1975. Appendix B, A20. Order denying rehearing was entered on September 16, 1975. Appendix C, A21. Order denying rehearing in banc was entered on September 16, 1975. Appendix D, A22. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

Questions Presented

1. Whether, in a corporate reorganization under Chapter X of the Bankruptcy Act, 11 U.S.C. § 501 et seq., it is "fair and equitable" within the meaning of § 221 of that Act, 11 U.S.C. § 621, to disregard corporate lines and to consolidate or pool assets and liabilities for purposes of dealing with unsecured claims but not to do so for purposes of dealing with secured claims.

2. If the answer is in the affirmative, whether such a consolidation is proper without exploration of the secured creditors' equities.

Statutes Involved

Bankruptcy Act, § 107, 11 U.S.C. § 507

Creditors or stockholders or any class thereof shall be deemed to be "affected" by a plan only if their or its interest shall be materially and adversely affected thereby. Bankruptcy Act, § 216, 11 U.S.C. § 616

A plan of reorganization under this chapter—

(6) shall specify the creditors or stockholders or any class of them not to be affected by the plan and the provisions, if any, with respect to them;

(7) shall provide for any class of creditors which is affected by and does not accept the plan by the two-thirds majority in amount required under this chapter, adequate protection for the realization by them of the value of their claims against the property dealt with by the plan and affected by such claims, either as provided in the plan or in the order confirming the plan, (a) by the transfer or sale, or by the retention by the debtor, or such property subject to the claims; or (b) by a sale of such property free of such claims, at not less than a fair upset price, and the transfer of such claims to the proceeds of such sale; or (c) by appraisal and payment in cash of the value of such claims; or (d) by such method as will, under and consistent with the circumstances of the particular case, adequately and fairly provide such protection;

Statement

Jurisdiction of the District Court for the Eastern District of New York, the court of first instance, was invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1334 and section 2a(9) of the Bankruptcy Act, 11 U.S.C. § 11a(9).

Continental Vending Machine Corporation (Continental) is a publicly owned corporation in the business of designing, manufacturing, operating and selling coin-activated cigarette, beverage and food vending machines. The machines were installed and operated on locations throughout the United States.

Continental Apco, Inc. (Apco) is a wholly owned subsidiary and sales arm of Continental. It sold Continental's machines and parts to Continental's other subsidiaries, since defunct, and to the general trade.

Mismanagement and other questionable activities on the part of Continental's dominant shareholder, officer and director, Roth, led to an investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission which resulted on April 8, 1963 in the appointment by the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York of a conservator for Continental.

On July 10, 1963 an involuntary petition was filed against Continental in the Eastern District of New York for reorganization under Chapter X of the Bankruptcy Act, 11 U.S.C. § 501 et seq. The order approving the petition appointed two trustees. On October 4, 1963 an involuntary petition for a Chapter X reorganization was filed against Apco, and Continental's trustees were appointed trustees for Apco. Resignation of one trustee left respondent, Irving L. Wharton, as the sole trustee for both debtors.

Petitioner, James Talcott, Inc., a factor, (A10,n.1) was the principal financier of both debtors. It made loans and advances on a secured basis. As security for Continental's obligations, petitioner received chattel mortgages and other security devices covering vending machines on location, assignments of location contracts, liens on machines in warehouses and in other places off the locations. As security for Apco's obligations, petitioner received assignments of accounts receivable arising from sales, chattel paper and liens on machines returned by customers.

All obligations of the two debtors were covered by security agreements with each, containing identical dragnet clauses providing that all security for a specific obligation under one agreement also stood as security for all other present and future obligations whether under the particular agreement or under other agreements. Thus, whatever property of Continental came within the orbit of petitioner's security interest stood as security for all of Continental's obligations. And this was also true with respect to Apco's property held as security by petitioner. The agreements did not provide for cross-collateralization and the debtors did not guarantee each other's debts to petitioner.

At the time of appointment of the conservator, Continental's obligations to petitioner amounted to about $3,500,000 and Apco's obligations approximated $2,000,000.

Upon commencement of the conservatorship for Continental and successive reorganization proceedings of Continental and Apco, petitioner began liquidating its security which resulted in a surplus of $380,000 in the Apco account and a deficit of $820,000 in the Continental account.

While liquidating its security, petitioner, during 1963, made five urgently needed loans to the conservator and trustees, respectively, in excess of $2,000,000, secured by conservator's and trustees' certificates. These remain unpaid to the extent of over $1,000,000 inclusive of interest.

As early as 1964, it became apparent to petitioner's counsel and it advised the trustee that the affairs of the two debtors were so intertwined that their assets, liabilities and the proceedings would have to be consolidated. Investigation led the trustee to the same conclusion. In his report pursuant to § 167(5), 11 U.S.C. § 567(5), filed on June 13, 1969, the trustee stated: There is no longer any business to be reorganized. A plan of reorganization providing for liquidation would be preferable to an adjudication in bankruptcy. The debtors were operated as a single economic unit. Any plan of reorganization should provide for a merger of their assets and liabilities and a consolidation of the two proceedings.

On June 20, 1969, the trustee filed a plan of reorganization, actually liquidation, and in his application for an amended notice of hearing, he represented: "(a) . . . Apco had, in fact, no separate economic existence, was not adequately capitalized, and constituted a mere instrumentality of the parent corporation, i.e., a separate corporate pocket or department of the parent and its business; (b) the operation of the separate entities in reality constituted a single enterprise in an economic sense." And Apco's officers and directors were not independent but were dominated by Roth.

The trustee further represented: There was such a complex pattern of fund transfers between the two debtors and of guarantees and cross-guarantees of each other's obligations that separation of their assets and liabilities was "virtually impossible." There was little likelihood of successful attempts to reconstruct intercompany transactions and no assurance of success "regardless of the amount of money, time and effort" expended. The trustee concluded that a merger of the assets and liabilities and a consolidation of the proceedings will afford "a fair, equitable and feasible solution to the insoluble problem resulting from the indiscriminate manipulation of the debtors, and their finances."

After the amended notice of hearing, petitioner's counsel, relying on Chemical Bank New York Trust Company v. Kheel, 369 F.2d 845 (2 Cir. 1969), advised the trustee that because of the proposed consolidation, petitioner asserted the right to apply the Apco surplus against the Continental deficiency.

An amended plan was filed on June 15, 1970, avowedly to preclude petitioner's said claim. The relevant provisions were: Claims against both debtors are treated on a consolidated basis "except for claims of Secured Creditors." Properties of both debtors are dealt with on a consolidated basis "without prejudice to the rights of Secured Creditors with respect to specific collateral securing specific indebtedness." Secured Creditors (Class 5) are to be paid out of their security, becoming unsecured creditors (Class 8) for any deficiency, with an express proviso against "an elevation or improvement of the status of a claim filed by any creditor in Class 5 as a result of the consolidation of the Debtors' Estates."

On May 20, 1971, the amended plan was approved by order, on findings substantially conforming to the trustee's representations.

On January 12, 1972, petitioner filed objections to confirmation of the amended plan, alleging that: It had filed a secured claim; it is the sole secured creditor in Class 5 and it did not accept the plan. By virtue of consolidation and under the dragnet clauses in the financing agreements, it is entitled to treat the properties of the two debtors "as one and indistinguishable and apply the Apco surplus against Continental's deficiency." The amended plan "is discriminatory as to (petitioner), improperly denies it the full realization of its security, to which it is entitled as a result of the consolidation, and hence not "fair and equitable" within the meaning of Section 221(2) of the Bankruptcy Act, and it fails to comply with the protective provisions of Section 216(7) of the Bankruptcy Act."

After a hearing, an order was entered on August 12, 1974, overruling petitioner's objections and confirming the plan. (A23) The Court of Appeals affirmed in a split decision (A1 and A9) [517 F.2d 997 and 1002 (2 Cir. 1975)] and denied rehearing and rehearing in banc. (A22 and A23)

Reasons for Granting the Writ

I.

The main question of power to differentiate secured from unsecured claims in a consolidation is "one really of first impression." (A6) In Chemical Bank New York Trust Company v. Kheel, 369 F.2d 845 (2 Cir. 1966), consolidation was ordered on application of the Government holding an unsecured priority claim against the parent corporation with insufficient assets to satisfy the claim. As a result of consolidation with affiliates having large assets, the Government was so far advantaged as to take practically the entire consolidated estate. The only differentiating fact is that the Government, unlike petitioner, did not have a consensual lien. The difference is more apparent than real. The treatment of the underlying claim is the issue. Security and priority relate only to the claim's rank. The other aspects of the two cases are exactly the same. The Government did not bargain for the assets of the affiliates. The creditors of the affiliates were disadvantaged. The majority refused to follow Kheel even on these aspects, which are inevitable consequences of every consolidation.

II.

The case is of exceptional importance. There is hardly a corporation, whether giant or one of modest size and resources, that does not have one or more subsidiaries or affiliates. As common are one-man or family corporations and other closely-knit groups operating as multiple corporate units. A recurring feature of corporate business is control and domination of subsidiaries and affiliates by parent corporations and of single or multiple corporations by their principal shareholders and managers.

Inadequate capitalization and cash resources inevitably require secured financing by banks and modern factors. Liens on all or most of corporate assets are no longer a novelty. When financial distress brings corporations into court, serious and complex questions arise in administration of multi-unit debtors whose intercompany dealings and indiscriminate treatment of assets and liabilities have blurred or erased corporate lines. The effect on both secured and unsecured creditors is substantial. The rights and interests involved are great. Reorganization courts, in consolidations, are regularly called upon to balance equities while preserving legal rights.

The problems in this case arise in Chapter XI arrangements and in Chapters I through VII straight bankruptcies as well as in Chapter X reorganizations. The complexity and frequency of the problems and the large interests they affect make this case one of exceptional importance in administration of the bankruptcy laws.

III.

(1) The majority's "only equitable rationale" (A18) is the assertion as a categorical fact: "petitioner's liens were in no way diminished or lien property transferred by virtue of intercorporate dealings." (A7) There is no evidence and no finding of the crucial fact. (A18)

The decision below rests in significant part (A8) on the bankruptcy court's undisputed equitable power to allow, reconsider, disallow and subordinate claims and to adjudicate equities as between creditors. Bankruptcy Act, § 2a(2), 11 U.S.C. § 11a(2); Pepper v. Litton, 308 U.S. 295, 308 (1939); Sampsell v .Imperial Paper & Color Corp., 313 U.S. 215, 219 (1941). In this case the power was exercised to exclude petitioner's claim from consolidation without the indispensable proof and finding that petitioner was guilty of any fraud or misconduct in relation to the debtors or creditors. (A17)

(2) Reorganization courts provide for exploration of equities to redress any unfairness or injustice to individual creditors resulting from consolidation. See Stone v. Eacho, 127 F.2d 384 (4th Cir.), rehearing denied, 128 F.2d 16, cert. denied 317 U.S. 635 (1942), where it was held at p. 290:

> "If there are equities in favor of any of the creditors which have not been sufficiently explored in the motion for consolidation and as to which they desire to be heard further, hearing can be afforded them in the consolidated proceeding."

Under Stone v. Eacho, provision for protection of equities has been made in the consolidation orders. In re Miller-Wohl Company, Inc. (S.D.N.Y., 1973), unreported; In re Lyntex Corporation (S.D.N.Y., 1974), unreported.

Generally, the equities protected relate to reliance upon the credit of the separate entities giving rise to the right of satisfaction out of the separate assets notwithstanding consolidation. In the "rare case", however, where the intermingling of assets and liabilities is so pervasive that separation is impossible, exploration of equities is futile and consolidation is ordered "to reach a rough approximation of justice to some rather deny any to all." Chemical Bank New York Trust Company v. Kheel, 369 F.2d 845, 847 (2 Cir. 1966). Judge Friendly, concurring, noted that preservation of equities is "conspicuously lacking here." p. 848.

Since in the case at bar, as in Kheel, separation is impossible, the particular equities of reliance apparently do not limit the consolidation power. But other equities are conceivable. In the instant case, as heretofore noted, the court itself suggested the equity of lien-diminution. Yet rehearing was denied in the face of petitioner's offer of proof, on the requested remand, that its lien on Apco stock owned by Continental and pledged to petitioner for a large loan was diminished, in fact destroyed, as a result of manipulation which brought about the demise of both debtors.

There is also the equity arising from the fact that "except for" petitioner's "large infusion of capital, there might be nothing at all for the unsecured creditors". (A17-18) There are (A16) and may be still other equities for petitioner and for others. None of them were explored (A17); no provision was made in the consolidation order or separately for special notice and hearing on equities that any creditor might wish to assert.

(3) To appreciate the remarkable oddity of the majority's reasoning to reach its result, recognition must be given, as the majority refused to do, to the major premise that the consolidation findings speak as of the pre-petition period when petitioner's transactions with the debtors were had under the financing agreements. The debtors' abuse of the corporate privilege at that time worked an implied merger of the debtors, their assets and liabilities.

Page v. Arkansas Natural Gas Corp., 53 F.2d 27 (8 Cir.), affirmed on other grounds, 286 U.S. 269 (1932). Continental and Apco came into court as impliedly merged entities. The consolidation findings merely confirmed the then existing merger which made the debtors one and their assets and liabilities interchangeable. Trustee's System Co. of Pennsylvania v. Payne, 65 F.2d 103, 108 (3 Cir. 1933); Fitzgerald v. Central Bank and Trust Company, 257 F.2d 118, 121 (10 Cir. 1958). (A14-15)

Rejection of the major premise led the majority into inconsistencies and illogicalities: (a) In the absence of cross-collateralization provisions in the financing agreements, the debts of Continental are not the debts of Apco. (b) The dragnet clause in the Apco agreements did not cover the debts of Continental. (A4, A5) (c) Under the plan, petitioner will obtain what it bargained for. (A7-A8) (d) Petitoner may not be permitted to improve its position. (A7, A29) (e) Petitioner's interests are not materially and adversely "affected" by the plan within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, § 107, 11 U.S.C. § 507 and the "absolute priority" rule has been followed. Case v. Los Angeles Lumber Products Co., 308 U.S. 106 (1939) 6A Collier, Bankruptcy § 11.06 at 613 (14th ed. 1970). (A9)

The major premise of a pre-petition implied merger refutes every one of the majority's underpinnings for the conclusions reached. (a) Absence of cross-collateralization is irrelevant. It would be necessary only if the debtors had been separate, "in which event there would be no need for the consolidation." (A15-16) (b) In "legal effect" the debtors were one at commencement of the proceedings. The security agrements with each debtor contained the same dragnet clauses. Hence the agreements were "in legal effect one and the same." (A15) (c) Only if the debtors had been in fact separate is it possible to say that the plan gives petitioner what it bargained for. Even though petitioner "may have dealt separately with each debtor and relied on the assets of each for its protection, without knowledge that in fact Continental and Apco were operating as a hopelessly entwined, single entity, the same can be said for probably most, if not all, of the unsecured creditors." (A17) (d) Such advantage as petitioner might obtain from consolidation accrues to many of the unsecured creditors. (A17) That is the natural consequence of consolidation. (e) Petitioner has an equitable lien on the Apco surplus for the Continental deficiency. (A19) Petitioner's interests are materially "affected" by the plan within the meaning of Bankruptcy Act, § 107, 11 U.S.C. § 507. The plan violates the "absolute priority" rule and Bankruptcy Act, § 216(7), 11 U.S.C. § 616(7). It is not "fair and equitable." Bankruptcy Act, § 221(2), 11 U.S.C. § 621(2).

Absence of findings, denial of opportunity to explore equities, employment of an untenable rationale, all result in a plainly erroneous judgment which is unfair and unjust to petitioner.

Conclusion

The principal issue in the judgment sought to be reviewed is of first impression in this court and important in the administration of the bankruptcy laws. The judgment is plainly erroneous. The petition for certiorari should be granted.

IRVING L. WHARTON, Trustee,

Before:

ANDERSON, MANSFIELD and OAKES,
Circuit Judges.

Appeal by a secured creditor in a Chapter X bankruptcy proceeding, challenging an approved plan of reorganization which calls for the consolidation of the debts and assets of two related corporations but provides that no secured creditor's claims shall be elevated or improved as a result of the consolidation. Appellant claims that the plan which was confirmed by the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Jacob Mishler, Chief Judge, was not "fair and equitable" since it treats unsecured claims as consolidated and secured claims as not consolidated. Held, that the plan is fair and equitable since the absolute priority of the secured creditor to the specific assets pledged to it are preserved and that the Bankruptcy Act does not require a consolidation to be complete for all purposes.

J. Jacob Hahn, Hahn, Hessen, Margolis & Ryan (Julius J. Abeson, of counsel), New York, N.Y. for Appellant.

Charles Seligson, Weil, Gotshal & Manges, New York, N.Y. (Joseph Marcheso, General Counsel for Continental Vending Machine Corp., of counsel), for Appellee.

Oakes, Circuit Judge:

This appeal is by a secured creditor, James Talcott, Inc. (Talcott), in a Chapter X bankruptcy proceeding, 11 U.S.C. § 501 et seq., involving a parent corporation, Continental Vending Machine Corp. (Continental), and its subsidiary, Continental Apco, Inc. (Apco). Talcott objects to an approved amended plan of reorganization for the two corporations because, while the plan calls for consolidation of the proceedings and treats the properties of the two debtors on the basis of a merger or consolidation of the two corporate entities, it provides that no secured creditor's claim shall be elevated or improved as a result of the consolidation. We are in short asked to determine whether it is "fair and equitable" under § 221 of the Bankruptcy Act (Act), 11 U.S.C. § 621, to disregard corporate lines and to consolidate or pool assets and liabilities for purposes of dealing with unsecured claims but not to do so for purposes of dealing with secured claims. We agree with the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Jacob Mishler, Chief Judge, that the amended plan is "fair and equitable" since the absolute priority of Talcott to the specific assets pledged to it in connection with loans made to both the parent and subsidiary corporations has been preserved and that the Act does not require consolidation to be complete for all purposes. Accordingly, we affirm Judge Mishler's order approving the trustee's amended plan.[1]

Continental is a publicly owned Indiana corporation which at one time had a number of subsidiaries but for present purposes had only one of note, Apco, which it wholly owned. Apco was principally the sales arm for and Continental was the manufacturer of vending machines. Talcott financed each corporation, receiving mortgages of machines and other security devices from Continental covering its indebtedness, and assignments of accounts receivable and assorted other liens from Apco covering its indebtedness. The security agreements with each contained no cross-collateralization agreement, i.e., no provision allowing Talcott to set off the obligations of one corporation against the collateral which it held to secure the debts of the related corporation, nor was there any guaranty by either Apco or Continental of the other's indebtedness. While the exact amounts are not yet ascertained, it appears that the liquidation of Talcott's security in Apco will leave at least a $380,000 surplus while the sale of the Continental security will result in a $820,000 deficit. Talcott, needless to say, would like to see its Apco lien apply to secure the Continental deficit. We point out that there is no evidence in the record that there were any intercompany transfers to the detriment of secured creditors, of which Talcott is now the only one remaining.

Appellant makes essentially two major points and a minor one. The first major one is that since improvement of some creditors' position is inherent in a consolidation it would be unfair and inequitable to permit the unsecured creditors to improve their position but to deny the secured creditor such improvement. The second major point is that the broad language of each of the security agreements giving Talcott a lien for "any and all obligations no matter how or when arising and whether under this or any agreement or otherwise . . ." applied to permit the Apco lien to cover the Continental deficit. The minor point, which was raised "with reservations," was that the plan was accepted by creditors holding 71.8 per cent of the total amount of claims filed and allowed. Appellant maintains that the amount required under § 179 of the Act, 11 U.S.C. § 579, is 75 per cent; that section, however, requires acceptance by creditors "holding two-thirds in amount" of the claims filed and allowed as to each class, so that we fail to see any merit whatsoever to this argument. We take up the major points in reverse order.

Talcott had no lien on the Apco surplus for the Continental deficiency under any of its security agreements. The language of the Apco agreement, while broad, did not go so far as to cover the debts of Continental. There is nothing to indicate that the debt of Continental was the debt of Apco. It may be true that if the parties agree, the validity of a lien does not depend upon the existence of a contemporaneous debt. In re Cichanowicz, 226 F. Supp. 288 (E.D.N.Y. 1964) (secured notes paid down to zero, subsequent advances held covered by original security). But this does not mean that the Apco lien would somehow remain attached to Apco surplus after application of the Apco collateral to satisfy its debt to Talcott. On the contrary, once that Talcott debt was satisfied, no further lien on Apco property could exist, because the obligation of Apco was paid in full. As was stated in United States v. Phillips, 267 F.2d 374, 377 (5th Cir. 1959), "In the absence of an obligation to be secured there can be no lien."[2] [2] Appellant also argues that the "cram down" provisions of § 216(7) of the Act, 11 U.S.C. § 616(7), are applicable to the present case. This section of the Act sets out a procedure to be followed to effectuate the conformation of a reorganization plan even if the plan is not accepted by a class of creditors.

We turn then to the question, one really of first impression, whether differentiation of secured from unsecured creditors in a consolidation upon reorganization is proper under the Act.[3] The power to consolidate is one arising out of equity, enabling a bankruptcy court to disregard separate corporate entities, to pierce their corporate veils in the usual metaphor, in order to reach assets for the satisfaction of debts of a related corporation. Soviero v. Franklin National Bank of Long Island, 328 F.2d 446 (2d Cir. 1964); In re Cintra Realty Corp., 413 F.2d 302 (2d Cir. 1969); Stone v. Eacho (In re Tip Top Tailors, Inc.), 127 plan, (a) by the transfer or sale, or by the retention by the debtor, of such property subject to such claims; or (b) by a sale of such property free of such claims, at not less than a fair upset price, and the transfer of such claims to the proceeds of such sale; or (c) by appraisal and payment in cash of the value of such claims; or (d) by such method as will, under and consistent with the circumstances of the particular case, equitably and fairly provide such protection. . . .

In the present case, however, this provision is inapplicable. As a secured creditor, Talcott is not "affected" by the amended plan within the meaning of the Act since its interests are not materially and adversely affected by the plan. As an unsecured creditor of Continental, Talcott is affected by the plan, but two-thirds of the class of unsecured creditors have accepted the plan and thus § 616(7) does not apply.

[3] There is no question that there is such differentiation under the amended plan. Article I thereof defines claims to include all claims against both Continental and Apco "which, except for the Claims of Secured Creditors, are treated herein on a consolidated basis." Article II provides that their properties will be dealt with "on the basis of a merger or consolidation thereof, without prejudice to the rights of Secured Creditors with respect to specific collateral securing indebtedness." Article IV, after providing that to the extent a secured creditor's claims are not satisfied by the sale of specific lien property the creditor is treated as an unsecured creditor, expressly precludes "elevation or improvement of the status" of a secured creditor's claim "as a result of the consolidation of the Debtor's Estates."

F.2d 284, 288-89 (4th Cir.), rehearing denied, 128 F.2d 16, cert. denied, 317 U.S. 635 (1942); Hillebrand v. Sav-Co, 353 F. Supp. 19, 21 (E.D. Ill. 1972). While it does not require that the creditors knowingly deal with the corporations as a unit, Chemical Bank New York Trust Co. v. Kheel, 369 F.2d 845, 847 (2d Cir. 1966), it should nevertheless be "used sparingly" because of the possibility of unfair treatment of creditors who have dealt solely with the corporation having a surplus as opposed to those who have dealt with the related entities with deficiencies. Id.

Appellant argues that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander; it would, however, swallow the sauce by improving its status from that of a now unsecured creditor of Continental to that of a secured creditor of Apco. It cites Chemical Bank, supra, as requiring this improvement or elevation, since there the consolidation that was ordered benefited the United States as a tax lienor. But Chemical Bank did not deal with consensual liens as here; it dealt with the statutory priority. Nothing in Chemical Bank suggests that the priority of the United States rested on a lien which attached to the consolidated assets; rather, combining the assets of the related companies simply made more money available for the estate, as to which, to be sure, there was a substantial priority claim. In Chemical Bank there was, moreover, every reason to believe that the Government as an unsecured creditor had, along with other unsecured creditors, suffered loss because of the indiscriminate shifting of assets between corporations. Here, as a secured creditor in both parent and subsidiary, Talcott's liens were in no way diminished or lien property transferred by virtue of intercorporate dealings. In the end, Talcott will obtain under the amended plan exactly what it bargained for with each in terms of security.

We have made it very plain that because consolidation in bankruptcy is "a measure vitally affecting substantive rights," the inequities it involves must be heavily outweighed by practical considerations such as the accounting difficulties (and expense) which may occur where the interrelationships of the corporate group are highly complex, or perhaps untraceable. See In re Flora Mir Candy Corp., 432 F.2d 1060, 1062-63 (2d Cir. 1970). Thus, there is nothing to say for the proposition that in the exercise of the bankruptcy court's equity powers, Local Loan Co. v. Hunt, 292 U.S. 234, 240 (1934), it cannot treat unsecured claims as consolidated and secured claims as not. See In re Pittsburgh Railways Co., 155 F.2d 477, 484 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 329 U.S. 731 (1946). Nor is there anything in the Act itself requiring the symmetry on which appellant insists. As we have pointed out, note 2 supra, as a secured creditor of Apco, Talcott is not "affected" by the amended plan within the meaning of § 107 of the Bankruptcy Act, 11 U.S.C. § 507, because its interests are not materially or adversely affected by the plan. In the allowance or disallowance of claims, the court has the equitable power under § 2(a)(2) of the Act, 11 U.S.C. § 11(a)(2), to make certain that injustice or unfairness does not occur. Pepper v. Litton, 308 U.S. 295, 308 (1939). Again, "The power of the bankruptcy court to subordinate claims or to adjudicate equities arising out of the relationship between the several creditors is complete." Sampsell v. Imperial Paper & Color Corp., 313 U.S. 215, 219 (1941). See also Vanston Bondholders Protective Committee v. Green, 329 U.S. 156 (1946) (disallowing interest on interest as inequitable).

Finally it is suggested that the "absolute priority" rule, Case v. Los Angeles Lumber Products Co., 308 U.S. 106 (1939), requires that Talcott, as a secured creditor of Continental, also be treated as a secured creditor of Apco to the extent of the Apco surplus. We recognize that that rule makes a reorganization plan fair and equitable if and only if it provides participation for claims and interests in complete recognition of their strict priorities. 6A Collier, Bankruptcy ¶ 11.06 at 613 (14th ed. 1970). But, as we have said, Talcott is obtaining under the amended plan exactly what it bargained for: secured creditor status to the extent that its collateral was adequate. As to the balance of its claim it participates as an unsecured creditor with all the rights of such to the consolidated assets, i.e., it is entitled to go against the Apco surplus as an unsecured creditor of Continental, along with all other unsecured group creditors. The absolute priority rule, as we see it, has therefore been followed.

Judgment affirmed.

ANDERSON, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

The majority holds that it is "fair and equitable" under § 221 of the Bankruptcy Act (Act), 11 U.S.C. § 621, to disregard corporate lines and to consolidate or pool assets and liabilities for purposes of dealing with unsecured claims but not to do so for purposes of dealing with secured claims. On the basis of the facts before the court, I respectfully dissent.

James Talcott, Inc. (Talcott), the appellant, was the principal financier or "factor" [1] for both Continental Vending Machine Corp. (Continental), a manufacturer of vending machines, and for Continental Apco, Inc. (Apco), a Continental sales subsidiary. Although Talcott received mortgages on vending machines and other security devices from Continental covering its indebtedness, and assignments of accounts receivable, chattel security devices and various other liens covering Apco's indebtedness, the written security agreements covering the obligations of Continental and Apco each contained a provision which provided, in relevant part:

> "You [i.e. Talcott] shall be entitled to hold all sums and all property of the undersigned, at any time to its credit or in your possession or upon or in which you may have a lien or security interest, as security for any and all obligations of the undersigned at any time owing to you and/or to any company which may now or hereafter be your subsidiary, no matter how or when arising and whether under this or any agreement or otherwise, and including all obligations for purchases made by the undersigned from any other concern factored by you or such subsidiary."

As noted by the majority opinion, however, neither security agreement contained a cross-collateralization provision,

[1] The term "factor," while traditionally referring to a "sales agent who receives goods and sells them for a commission, having a possessor lien on such goods or their proceeds," today generally denotes "a person who lends or advances money on the security of inventory or accounts receivable." 68 Am. Jur. 2d Secured Transactions, § 133 (1973). Talcott was a factor of the second variety.

and neither Continental nor Apco formally guaranteed the other's indebtedness.

On April 8, 1963, a conservator was appointed for Continental on the application of the Securities and Exchange Commission. An involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed on July 5, 1963, but this proceeding was superseded when involuntary petitions for reorganization were filed on July 10, 1963 and October 4, 1963, under Chapter X of the Bankruptcy Act with respect to Continental and Apco, respectively.

Upon commencement of the conservatorship for Continental and successive reorganization proceedings of Continental and Apco, Talcott began and thereafter continued liquidation of its security, which, as noted in the majority opinion, left a surplus of approximately $380,000 in the Apco account and a deficiency of approximately $820,000 in the Continental account. Talcott also made numerous loans during this period to the conservator and to the trustee, secured by trustee's certificates, none of which had been repaid by the time this appeal was commenced.

Although as early as 1964, Talcott's counsel advised the trustee that there would probably have to be a consolidation of the two proceedings, it was not until June 13, 1969, when the trustee filed his report pursuant to § 167(5) of the Act, that he proposed such a consolidation. Thereafter, on June 20, 1969, he filed a consolidated plan of reorganization. About a year later, after several hearings on the proposed reorganization plan, an amended plan of reorganization was filed on June 15, 1970, which contained the proviso "Anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding, nothing in the Plan shall be, or be deemed to be an elevation or improvement of the status of a claim filed by any creditor in Class 5 [secured creditors] as a result of the consolidation of the Debtors' Estates." On May 20, 1971, an order, with findings, was entered approving the amended plan, but on January 14, 1972, Talcott filed objections to its confirmation. Although a hearing was held on January 21, 1972, an order overruling Talcott's objections and confirming the amended plan was not entered until August 12, 1974—over two and one-half years later. This appeal followed.

In refutation of Talcott's argument that the broad language of its security agreements permits its lien on the Apco surplus to cover the Continental deficit upon consolidation of the debts and assets of Apco and Continental, the majority holds that Talcott did not possess a valid lien on the Apco surplus at the time the consolidation was approved because, as a result of Talcott's prior liquidation of the Apco collateral the obligation of Apco had been paid in full. Although In re Cichanowicz, 226 F. Supp. 288 (E.D.N.Y. 1964), stands for the proposition that under New York law a mortgage or other security agreement providing for future advances does not cease to exist merely because all earlier advances have been completely paid off (see G. Gilmore, Security Interests In Personal Property, Vol. II, § 35.3, at 924, n. 8 (1965)), the security agreement remains in existence only as to future advances of the "same class as the primary obligation . . . and so related to it that the consent of the debtor to its inclusion may be inferred." National Bank of Eastern Arkansas v. Blankenship, 177 F. Supp. 667, 673 (E.D. Ark. 1959), aff'd sub nom National Bank of Eastern Arkansas v. General Mills, Inc., 283 F.2d 574 (8 Cir. 1960). See also G. Gilmore, Security Interests In Personal Property, Vol.

II, § 35.2 at 920; § 35.3 at 924-925; § 33.5 at 932 (1965). Any surplus remaining after the security of the defaulting debtor has been liquidated to satisfy the debt is, at least in the absence of an explicit agreement by debtor and creditor to the contrary, clearly not of the same class as the periodic future advances to a non-defaulting debtor contemplated under the typical inventory financing or receivables financing agreement.

If the validity of Talcott's claim necessarily depended upon the continued existence of a consensual lien on the Apco surplus uuder the broad provisions of Talcott's security agreement once the collateral had been liquidated, as assumed by the court below and as argued by the trustee on appeal, I would be in complete agreement with the majority's holding. As the majority opinion recognizes, however, there still remains the broader question whether differentiation between secured and unsecured creditors in a consolidation upon reorganization is proper under the Act. Under the circumstances present in this case, I believe that question must be answered in the negative.

In his June 13, 1969 report, filed pursuant to § 167(5) of the Bankruptcy Act, the trustee made the following statement based upon his investigation of the affairs of the two debtors:

> "It is clear that the debtors were operated as a single economic unit with little or no attention paid to the needs of Apco or to Continental's other subsidiaries. Any plan of reorganization which is proposed for said debtors should provide for a merger of the assets and liabilities of the debtors and consolidation of the within proceedings."

Accordingly, in the plan of reorganization, filed June 20, 1969, the trustee proposed that "All Properties of Continental, Apco, Coast Automatic Vending Corp., Continental Apco of Canada, Ltd., and any of their subsidiary or affiliated corporations and their Trustee . . . be dealt with by the Plan, on the basis of a merger or consolidation thereof." The trustee also stated:

> "The bases for applicant's recommendation [that any plan of reorganization should provide for a merger of the assets and liabilities of the debtors and a consolidation of the within proceedings] are that . . . , (e) there were guarantees and cross-guarantees of each other's obligations by the debtors which, in addition to the complex pattern of borrowing transactions between the debtors, makes the task of separating the assets and liabilities of the debtors virtually impossible; (f) there is little, if any, likelihood that an attempt to reconstruct all or a substantial portion of the financial transactions which occurred between the debtors would be successful; and, the cost of such an attempt might well exceed $1,000,000; and (g) no assurance can be given that such a division could be accomplished, regardless of the amount of money, time and effort which might be expended in such an attempt."

These findings were not changed in the amended plan.

It is clear from the foregoing that the instant consolidation merely confirmed an implied merger of the two debtors which pre-dated the filing of the involuntary reorganization petitions. See Page v. Arkansas Natural Gas Corporation, 53 F.2d 27 (8 Cir. 1931), aff'd on other grounds, 286 U.S. 269 (1932). Because in legal effect Continental and Apco were one, prior to the initiation of these proceedings, and Talcott's security agreement with each contained the same broad dragnet clause, it follows that at the time the involuntary reorganization petitions were filed, Talcott's security agreements with Continental and Apco were in legal effect, one and the same.[2] See Trustees System Co. of Pennsylvania v. Payne, 65 F.2d 103 (3 Cir. 1933), in which the court held that the plaintiffs, as creditors of the parent corporation, had the equitable right to move for ancillary receivers of five subsidiary corporations which had not in fact maintained identities truly separate from the parent, because their character as creditors of the parent corporation extended to all the corporate departments or agencies it embraced; Fitzgerald v. The Central Bank & Trust Company, 257 F.2d 118 (10 Cir. 1958), in which a secured claim of a bank, which had lent money under a chattel mortgage to the president of a corporation doing business in his separate legal identity as the corporation's sales company, was treated as the debt of both the corporation and the sales company.

The absence of a cross-collateralization provision in Talcott's security agreements is, therefore, irrelevant. Such a provision would only have been necessary if Continental and Apco had, in fact, been two separate and independent

[2] Talcott is not contending, of course, that a creditor secured solely by an identifiable piece of property belonging to one of the debtors could improve his secured position by consolidation. It is the breadth of Talcott's dragnet clause and its inclusion in identical form in each agreement, which necessitates different treatment.

corporations, in which event there would be no need for the consolidation contemplated here, similar to that approved in Chemical Bank New York Trust Company v. Kheel, 369 F.2d 845 (2 Cir. 1966).[3]

Equitable considerations also prompt me to note that had the trustee proposed a consolidated plan of reorganization prior to Talcott's liquidation of its Apco collateral,[4] he could not have maintained that Talcott did not have a valid lien on the Apco collateral then in Talcott's possession, and could not treat the debts of the two ostensibly independent corporations as one. It is hardly equitable now to hold that because the trustee took five years and the court took an additional five years to confirm that Continental and Apco had long been operated as a single economic entity, Talcott's claim can now be defeated, because meanwhile it had liquidated its collateral.

The majority, however, takes pains to point out that the court's power to consolidate is one arising out of equity; that it has the authority under § 2(a)(2) of the Act to insure that injustice is avoided; and that it can subordinate

[3] The court in Kheel, when discussing the necessity for substantive consolidation based upon the hopelessly intertwined dealings of the debtors gave no indication that such consolidation was to be used solely for the benefit of unsecured creditors. Similarly, Kheel, did not distinguish between secured and unsecured creditors when acknowledging the possible unfairness of consolidation to creditors who dealt solely with, or relied wholly on the assets of, one of the debtors to be consolidated. While that question was not directly before the court, it was obvious that unsecured, as well as secured creditors, could so rely.

[4] Cf. Chemical Bank New York Trust Company v. Kheel, 369 F.2d 845 (2 Cir. 1966), in which consolidation was approved pursuant to a motion by the United States, a major creditor, prior to the preparation and submission of a plan of liquidation.

claims or adjudicate equities which have as their bases the relationships among the creditors. Thus, the majority concludes that in the exercise of the bankruptcy court's equity powers it can treat unsecured claims as consolidated and secured claims as not. I agree, but the majority has failed to demonstrate that equitable considerations justify this result in the instant case. In fact, the equities are in favor of Talcott as previously discussed; and there are no countervailing inequities for which it has been responsible. There is no indication that Talcott is guilty of any fraud or wrongdoing with respect to Continental, Apco, or any of the other creditors in these proceedings. Even though Talcott may have dealt separately with each debtor and relied on the assets of each for its protection, without knowledge that in fact Continental and Apco were operating as a hopelessly entwined, single entity, the same can be said for probably most, if not all, of the unsecured creditors. The relative equities of relying creditors versus non-relying creditors, secured and unsecured, were not explored below, and the whole thrust of Kheel is that in the "rare case" such as this, where the hopelessly confused interrelationships cannot be unscrambled without large expenditures of time and money, and even then with no assurance of success, the court may order consolidation "to reach a rough approximation of justice to some rather than deny any to all." Chemical Bank New York Trust Company v. Kheel, supra, at 847. Although Talcott might secure an advantage through consolidation that it otherwise would not have had, likewise an advantage accrues, solely because of the consolidation, to many of the unsecured creditors who otherwise would not have had it. Moreover, except for Talcott's large infusions of capital, there might now be nothing at all for the unsecured creditors.

The only equitable rationale put forward by the majority for distinguishing between secured and unsecured creditors in this case is the assertion that "Talcott's liens were in no way diminished or lien property transferred by virtue of intercorporate dealings." But there is no supporting evidence in the record and no finding to this effect in Judge Mishler's order conforming the trustee's amended plan of reorganization. Moreover, as noted by the court in Kheel and by the trustee in the instant case, consolidation was properly ordered in this case because it was virtually impossible to reconstruct intercorporate claims, transactions, liabilities and ownership of assets. For these very same reasons Talcott would undoubtedly find it equally impossible to demonstrate that its liens were diminished or lien property transferred even if it occurred. It certainly cannot be asserted with assurance, however, that money loaned by Talcott to Continental, and ostensibly secured, was not in fact turned over to Apco thereby creating the Continental "deficiency." It seems to me that the assumption underlying the type of consolidation present here and in Kheel is that the indiscriminate manipulation of the debtors was so extensive that neither the trustee nor the bankruptcy court could begin to sort out how each creditor or even classes of creditors were affected, and that all must have suffered, absent proof to the contrary. There is no such contrary proof here.

For the foregoing reasons, I would hold that Talcott had an equitable lien [5] on all the Apco collateral, including that now determined to be a "surplus," dating at the very least from the commencement of the reorganization proceedings. This lien was not dissipated by Talcott's liquidation of its Apco collateral, and permits Talcott, upon consolidation, to treat the debts of Continental as the debts of Apco under its security agreements, and to apply the so-called Apco "surplus" to the Continental deficiency. Accordingly, I would reverse.

[5] The lien here invoked is the kind which the chancellor creates to do equity under the peculiar circumstances of the case, and, in particular, by the bankruptcy chancellor to implement a just reorganization. It can be described as a right, not existing at law, to have specific property applied in whole or in part to the payment of a particular debt and is based on general considerations of right and justice as applied to the relationship of the parties in the instant dispute. See generally, 51 Am. Jur. 2d Liens §§ 22-25 (1970).

On June 23, 1969, the Reorganization Trustee filed a consolidated Plan of Reorganization for Continental Vending Machine Corp. (Continental) and Continental Apco (Apco). Subsequently, the plan was amended and, by order dated May 20, 1971, the amended plan was approved by the Court and submitted to the creditors and stockholders for their consideration. A hearing on the confirmation of the plan was held on January 21, 1972. Talcott, a secured creditor of Continental and Apco, has filed an objection to the amended plan on the grounds that (1) the amended plan violates the provisions of § 216(7) of the Bankruptcy Act, 11 U.S.C. § 616(7), and (2) the amended plan is not fair and equitable to Talcott within the meaning of §221(2) of the Act, 11 U.S.C. § 621(2).

Section 221 of the Act provides as follows:

The judge shall confirm a plan if satisfied that—

(1) the provisions of subchapter VII, section 599, and subchapter X of this chapter have been complied with;

(2) the plan is fair and equitable, and feasible;

(3) the proposal of the plan and its acceptance are in good faith and have not been made or procured by means or promises forbidden by this title;

(4) all payments made or promised by the debtor or by a corporation issuing securities or acquiring property under the plan or by any other person, for services and for costs and expenses in, or in connection with, the proceeding or in connection with the plan and incident to the reorganization, have been fully disclosed to the judge and are reasonable or, if to be fixed after confirmation of the plan, will be subject to the approval of the judge; and

(5) the identity, qualifications, and affiliations of the persons who are to be directors or officers, or voting trustees, if any, upon the consummation of the plan, have been fully disclosed, and that the appointment of such persons to such offices, or their continuance therein, is equitable, compatible with the interests of the creditors and stockholders and consistent with public policy.

Talcott argues that the amended plan does not comply with the provisions of § 216 of the Act (Art. 10, Subch. X), 11 U.S.C. § 616, and thus fails to satisfy the first condition of § 221. Section 216 provides in relevant part that:

(7) shall provide for any class of creditors which is affected by and does not accept the plan by the two-thirds majority in amount required under this chapter, adequate protection for the realization by them of the value of their claims against the property dealt with by the plan and affected by such claims, either as provided in the plan or in the order confirming the plan, (a) by the transfer or sale, or by the retention by the debtor, of such property subject to such claims; or (b) by a sale of such property free of such claims, at not less than a fair upset price, and the transfer of such claims to the proceeds of such sale; or (c) by appraisal and payment in cash of the value of such claims; or (d) by such method as will, under and consistent with the circumstances of the particular case, equitably and fairly provide such protection;

Talcott asserts that (1) it is a secured creditor of Apco, (2) it is "affected" by the plan[1], (3) as the only member of the class of secured creditors, it does not accept the plan, and (4) the plan fails to provide adequate protection for its security interest.

[1] Section 107 of the Bankruptcy Act, 11 U.S.C. § 507, defines creditors who are affected by a reorganization plan as follows:

> Creditors or stockholders or any class thereof shall be deemed to be "affected" by a plan only if their or its interest shall be materially and adversely affected thereby. In the event of controversy, the court shall after hearing upon notice summarily determine whether any creditor or stockholder or class is so affected.

Talcott's argument, as the Trustee points out, is based on the false premise that it holds a security interest in the Apco surplus which is rendered enforceable by consolidation. (Trustee's Memorandum at 28). Talcott contends that at the time of the filing of the Chapter X petition, it held a valid secured lien on the Apco property in its possession. Post-petition liquidation of Talcott's security resulted in full satisfaction of Talcott's claim against Apco and produced a $380,000 surplus. Under the broad language of the security agreement,[2] Talcott asserts, it retained a continuing secured lien on this surplus "[u]ntil and unless Talcott should have become satisfied beyond any peradventure of the exhaustion of the remotest possibility of some yet undiscovered obligation subject to the lien, and until a final striking of the balances in its numerous accounts with the debtors. . . ." (Talcott's Reply Memorandum at 4). Upon consolidation, the liabilities of Apco and Continental would be merged, thereby entitling Talcott to apply its Apco lien against the $820,000 Continental deficiency.

The absence for a period of time of an underlying debt did not, Talcott contends, in any way impair its lien. Citing In re Cichanowicz, 226 F.Supp. 288, 291 (E.D.N.Y. 1964), Talcott argues that the "validity of a lien does not depend upon the existence of a contemporaneous debt, if the parties so agreed." (Talcott's Reply Memorandum at 5). Cichanowicz simply stands for the proposition that a mortgage can be revived to secure debts incurred after the original indebtedness is discharged if the parties expressly or impliedly agree on this result. The court finds no authority in Cichanowicz for imposing a lien on surplus remaining after the application of collateral to a secured debt. The security agreement between Talcott and Apco, although broad, cannot be interpreted as creating such a lien. Moreover, Talcott's position is contrary to the long-established, basic principle that "[i]n the absence of an obligation to be secured there can be no lien." United States v. Phillips, 267 F.2d 374, 377 (5th Cir. 1959). In Phillips, the court clearly stated the applicable rule as follows:

[2] Talcott's security agreements with Continental and with Apco contained the following identical provisions:

> You shall be entitled to hold all sums and all property of the undersigned, at any time to its credit or in your possession or upon or in which you may have a lien or security interest, as security for any and all obligations of the undersigned at any time owing to you and/or to any company which may now or hereafter be your subsidiary, no matter how or when arising and whether under this or any agreement or otherwise, and including all obligations for purchases made by you or such subsidiary.

> A lien is a charge upon property for the payment or discharge of a debt. It is therefore dependent upon the existence, the amount of, and the provability of the debt. If the debt has been paid or otherwise expunged as for fraud or by set-off, the lien is extinguished.

The court finds, therefore, that Talcott is simply an unsecured creditor as to the Continental deficiency, and that, as such, his rights are fully protected by the consolidation plan.

Talcott also challenges the amended plan on the ground that it is unfair and inequitable and therefore violates § 221(2) of the Act. Citing Chemical Bank New York v. Kheel, 369 F.2d 845 (2d Cir. 1966), Talcott argues that as a "necessary consequence" of consolidation, it had the right to apply the Apco surplus againts the Continental deficiency and that the amended plan, by limiting secured creditors to "specific collateral securing specific indebtedness," deprived it of that right.

Here again, Talcott's argument is premised upon the existence of a valid security interest in the Apco surplus. As discussed above, such a premise is unsupported by either accepted rules of law or by the terms of the security agreement itself. Moreover, Talcott's reliance on Kheel is misplaced. In Kheel, Chemical Bank, a secured creditor of one of the bankrupt corporations, opposed a motion by the United States to consolidate chapter X proceedings with respect to eight corporations owned and controlled by one Kulukundis.

The court approved the consolidation, but cautioned that:

> The power to consolidate should be used sparingly because of the possibility of unfair treatment of creditors of a corporate debtor who have dealt solely with that debtor without knowledge of its interrelationship with others. Yet in the rare case such as this, where the interrelationships of the group are hopelessly obscured and the time and expense necessary even to attempt to unscramble them so substantial as to threaten the realization of any net assets for all the creditors, equity is not helpless to reach a rough approximation of justice to some rather than deny any to all.

369 F.2d at 847. Judge Friendly, while concurring with the result reached by the majority, noted in a separate opinion his misgivings as to the elevated status which consolidation would confer on the Government's statutory lien:

> Equality among creditors who have lawfully bargained for different treatment is not equity but its opposite, and the argument for equality has a specially hollow ring when made by the United States whose priority over other creditors will necessarily be enhanced by having the assets of all these corporations thrown into hotchpot.

369 F.2d at 848.

In the instant case, Talcott, as a secured creditor of Continental, received exactly the treatment for which it bargained. To allow Talcott to apply the Apco surplus to the remaining Continental deficiency through the fictional secured creditor status which Talcott now advances would be to give it considerably more than what it bargained for, to the prejudice and detriment of the other unsecured creditors. If there were no consolidation, Talcott would clearly be an unsecured creditor of Continental as to the amount owing after liquidation of its security. Consolidation under the amended plan will leave Talcott as an unsecured creditor as to the Continental deficiency. Accordingly, the court finds that the amended plan is "fair and equitable" and satisfies the condition imposed by § 221(2) of the Act.

Talcott's objections to the amended plan are overruled. The court is satisfied that the plan meets the requirements of § 221. The amended plan dated May 20, 1971 is confirmed and it is

So Ordered.
